Grenada

This is the school I taught at in Grenada. It was situated high in the mountains which made the bus rides quite an adventure. There were around 20 students of high school age who attended and learned basic math and english skills.

This is a group of my students who made up the soccer team for our school. All of the students were invited to attend this special sports activity day where they competed in a number of sports. I was lucky enough to referee some games as well as form my own team to compete against my students.

My students took me on a mountain climbing adventure to the highest peak in Grenada. This allowed me to become close to the students because it was outside the classroom environment and we were able to share our thoughts openly.

This is some other teachers at the school who were teaching us "survival cooking". All of the food was picked from the trees and cooked on an open fire. I learned a lot about their culture and will never forget how friendly they were.
