Of the many sites we volunteered at, we spent our mornings in the neighborhood called Azucenas. While there we played with children like Carina (below) and helped them with their homework.

Jorge developed cerebral palsy as an infant when his mother could not afford the Tylenol needed to bring down his fever. Michelle and I visited him daily to help with physical therapy and read him stories.

Every afternoon we taught English as a Second Language to a group of students. Their ages ranged from 6 to 22 so we often divided into two groups. During breaks we played games in the yard and talked about our two cultures.
